5 Mistakes That Cost Relocators Thousands (Avoid These)

Most of the expensive mistakes in a Cayman relocation aren't exotic — they're avoidable. Here are the five that come up again and again.

1 Choosing the wrong entity type from day one

Forming a standard Exempted Company when your situation actually calls for a Foundation Company or an ELP means re-papering everything later — legal fees twice, for work that should've been done once.

2 Skipping Economic Substance compliance

Cayman entities conducting certain 'relevant activities' must demonstrate genuine local substance. Ignore this and you risk penalties and a structure that doesn't hold up if it's ever challenged.

3 Not tracking physical presence days properly

Both your Cayman residency category and your home country's exit rules often depend on day-counts. People regularly lose track mid-year and only find out it's a problem at tax time.

4 Underestimating the real cost of living

Housing and imported goods in Cayman are genuinely expensive. Relocators who budget only around tax savings — without a realistic cost-of-living number — get an unpleasant surprise in month two.

5 Going it alone instead of coordinating both sides

The single biggest cost driver is treating the Cayman side and the home-country side as separate projects. They have to be planned together, with your accountant, an immigration attorney, and someone on the ground.

Don't learn these the expensive way. Message Seb on WhatsApp (+1 345 555 0134) and get a straight answer on what applies to your specific situation before you commit to anything.
